Helena Business College Is Pioneer Commercial School

During the earthquake, which damaged the building housing the Helena Business college, Mrs. D. P. Patenaude, manager, moved the entire plant to her residence where school was resumed promptly. The earthquake caused the building to be destroyed in 1917, and the school was moved to the Higgins building on Flavel, where it has been located since.

Two years after the Helena Business college was established, it had expanded to such an extent that the entire room was found to be larger quarters. They entered the entire third floor of the newly built Hensky block on Ninth and Main and there for 18 years scores of young men and women learned the rudiments of bookkeeping, stenography, office work and accounting. In 1937 the school was moved to the Higgins building on Flavel, where it has been located since.

Who said it's hard to borrow from a bank?

"I used to hesitate to ask the bank for a loan myself, but I feel differently now. Last month I needed some money to start my own business, but the bank showed me how they could lend me the money and how I could pay it back. I got a good rate and fast service. On the basis of my own experience with a bank loan, I'd certainly advise anybody who wants to borrow to see the bank first!"
